ABOUT THE MOUNTAIN

The spectacular peaks of Al Jabal Al Akhdar were up-folded following a tumultuous collision of the Arabian and Eurasian tectonic plates in the late Cretaceous Period perhaps eighty million years ago. As a result of that cataclysmic upheaval, massive sections of ocean mantle and continental crust were thrust high above the land, creating what is known today as the Al Hajar Mountain range.

As the long Al Hajar Mountain chain winds its way along the spine of Oman, ancient sedimentary layers of many colours contrast with dark igneous rock in a magnificent array of colour and form. One mountain stands out because of its distinctive colour – and this is Al Jabal Al Akhdar, the 'Green Mountain'.
